Homeschool Curriculum for Special Needs Students

Fortunately, homeschooling parents don't need an advanced degree in special education to effectively teach their children. Our curriculum is specifically tailored to support children with special needs. When choosing a special needs curriculum for homeschooling, it's essential to ensure that it:

Proceeds at the students own pace.

Builds on existing reading, writing and math skills.

Allows placement and progress for each child at independent levels for math and language arts.

Encourages kids to become active learners through exploration and discovery.

Introduces new learning opportunities in a safe, supportive environment.

Balances learning with fun!

Our interactive multimedia lessons is perfect for children with short attention spans, autism, processing disorders, dyslexia, and other learning disabilities.

Our Special Needs Curriculum is designed to cater to a diverse range of learning needs, specifically targeting students with various conditions such as autism (including high-functioning autism), down syndrome, auditory processing disorder, dyslexia, global developmental decay, dyspraxia, and others.
